"Now that is an interesting idea. Quality instead of quantity. Of course, we have to ask ourselves, what took librarians ten years to realize that? I do note that being a librarian is kind of a 'slow' profession, but still... it's not like we couldn't have collected high quality links a long time ago..."

"And libraries? They hire library school graduates. In case the penny hasn't dropped, let's do the comparison in our heads. On the one hand, we have the best engineers and programmers in the country, and on the other hand we have…library school graduates. Unless the ALA can lobby successfully for some anti-competitive labor standards favoring librarians, I don't see how libraries are going to compete."

-The Annoyed Librarian

"Librarians should just relax, because they're not going to reinvent anything. They never have. They never will. That's not what libraries are for, but a lot of librarians like to get all hot and bothered that they can't compete in a field they never entered in the first place."
